The public seminar of the DREAM project Temporalities of Revolts. Hopes, Projection and Visions proposes to explore the presence of the past and future in the present of the uprising. We will be listening to research on the projection patterns - heroes and heroines, icons and images to be confronted with; on the places of projection, which are places to be reached or conquered like Palestine, Jerusalem or reference capitals like Moscow, Mecca or Tehran.

Hopes may also be inscribed in the space in the form of the dreamed, possible or unattainable conquest of a “Winter Palace”, a symbol for a popular victory and the installation of revolutionaries in the places of power. These figures of projection can also be declined in the form of an eschatology that allows the sacrifice or renders it acceptable. This will also be an opportunity to reflect on the notion of defeat, which is present in the shape of the echo of past defeats (linked in particular to Palestine). The people in revolt draw from these imaginaries possible futures and present battles. Finally, we will consider the question of archives as a place of activation of the past in the present.
